Land-use planning is the process of regulating the use of land in an effort to promote more desirable social and environmental outcomes as well as a more efficient use of resources. Goals of land use planning may include environmental conservation, restraint of urban sprawl, minimization of transport costs, prevention of land use conflicts, and a reduction in exposure to pollutants. By and large, the uses of land determine the diverse socioeconomic activities that occur in a ...

Land-use planning - Wikipedia

Between 1992 and 1994, Ghana restructured its urban and land use planning system into a decentralised form where more political, planning and administrative power was transferred to the district level in order to facilitate an increase in exchange between governmental and public concerns. The district assemblies have legislative, executive and deliberative powers. For example, they have the ...
